Hedge, to secure oneself from loss over one bet by making others. Hedging, as a system of betting, is entirely dependent upon what happens in the market after a horse has been backed. From information, or good judgment, a backer selects, say, three horses, A, B, and C, whom he thinks likely to advance in the betting, and takes 50 to 1--say, 1000 to. 20--against each of them. As the race-day approaches the horse A may fall out of the betting, from accident or other cause, and have to be written off as a dead loss of 20. But the other two horses, as anticipated, improve in public favour, and the backer, who now becomes a Hedger, succeeds in laying 5...
