During World War II, Ralph Troll was a small boy living with his parents in Darmstadt, Germany. Their city was known as Wissenschaftsstadt (City of Science). Ralph's mother was Jewish so, in 1938, his father moved his family to an isolated farm about ten miles from the Rhine River. His father hoped to escape Nazi persecution. He knew it was a threat to his wife. His father was a chemist and continued his work, even though his laboratory had been bombed. To escape the Allied bombs, Ralph, his parents, and his baby sister often spent nights in the cellar of the farmhouse or days in nearby foxholes. His father built cots so they could be a bit more comfortable in their new cellar bedroom. Their home sat on five acres. They grew asparagus and potatoes, and raised chickens, rabbits and goats. They were well fed, unlike many others during this time, who often went hungry. Like most people, they had neither running water nor electricity. A kerosene lamp provided light, and they pumped their water from the ground. There were good German neighbors in the countryside who risked their lives to protect Jews who were running and hiding. They, along with Ralph's family, were cheering for the Allies to win, knowing they could stop Hitler's madness. Although there was a constant fear of attack or betrayal, Ralph and his parents worked hard to keep food on the table and to help others when they could. In February of 1945, the Gestapo appeared in the middle of the night and took his mother away to Theresienstadt concentration camp. She traveled for five days...
