After all, when we would get there, we could probably see nothing but water, or great fields of ice. But we are anxious to learn of the southlands, so suppose we go on a journey to the farthest southland of which we know. That is Australia, and the islands of Tasmania and New Zealand. If we go there we will have a journey of new experiences. We never before have been on so long an ocean voyage. Never have we been so far from home. What will we find in this far away land? Do people there live in large cities? Do they have large homes like ours, and do the boys and girls have any fun? Do they go to school, and do you suppose they ever took a little journey to the United States? Perhaps they are asking these very questions about us. We have heard that there are many queer things in Australia; but America would doubtless seem as strange to the people of that country. It will be delightful to visit a country where we may see new, and, to us, strange things. We will doubtless have many surprises before we return, and learn much of a country and people of whom we know so little.
